

September 27, 2011

Net Diary: A Volleyball Club's Start-Up Story

By Chris Beerman

Are you starting a new volleyball club or considering it? As an organization committed to promoting the growth of junior volleyball and specifically focused on the needs of junior clubs, the Junior Volleyball Association realizes there is a need for more education on starting a junior volleyball club.

This blog is entirely designed to share the personal experience of Chris Beerman in his first year as Club Director of Lexington United Volleyball. LUV is currently in its first year of operation. Prior to entering the realm of club volleyball, Chris was a 20 year DI collegiate coach, most recently an Assistant Coach at University of Kentucky, and prior to that he was the Head Coach at University of Pittsburgh and James Madison University. In collaboration with Munciana Volleyball, LUV will be an all-encompassing volleyball club for girls in the Lexington, KY area. It will provide team volleyball opportunities for all ages (4-18) and competitive levels as well as lessons, camps, tournaments and college recruiting education.

Through a series of posts, Chris will depict his experience as Club Director of a brand new volleyball club in hopes that it may educate others looking to do the same, while sparking dialogue to share ideas, challenges, and successes along the way.

Chris shares the same vision as JVA, which is to promote the growth of youth and junior volleyball. This blog is one channel that JVA hopes will serve as a resource to all club directors, aspiring club directors, and passionate educators in youth and junior volleyball. To view more resources and education provided by JVA click here. The JVA is an organization that is run by junior club directors for junior clubs.

Check out JVA's Blog