What made you decide to get into coaching volleyball?

I have played volleyball since third grade and continued through college. The sport shaped who I am — not just as an athlete, but as a person. It taught me discipline, resilience, competitiveness, and how to build meaningful relationships. Some of my most important life lessons and lifelong friendships came through volleyball. I chose to coach because I want my athletes to experience that same growth and success. More than wins and losses, I want them to leave my program confident, competitive, and prepared for life beyond the court.

What are your career goals in the sport?

My career goal in volleyball is to build a championship-level program rooted in consistency, culture, and development. I want to lead our team to district and conference championships, make consistent state appearances, and ultimately compete for and win state titles. Beyond championships, my goal is to create a program that develops confident leaders, disciplined competitors, and athletes who take pride in representing something bigger than themselves. I want sustained success — not just great seasons — and a standard of excellence that becomes the expectation year after year.

Which coaches have influenced you the most?

The coaches who influenced me most are my mom, Sarah Wall, and Cheryl Sharples. My mom coached me in high school and taught me the value of hard work, high expectations, and striving to be my best, lessons I now bring to my own athletes. Cheryl Sharples showed me the importance of compassion and balance. When I had my first baby, she allowed me to bring my daughter to practice, letting me continue coaching while being a mom. Their guidance shaped both my coaching philosophy and how I lead on and off the court.

What do you enjoy most about your coaching job?

What I enjoy most about coaching is seeing my athletes succeed. There's nothing better than watching their hard work pay off and experiencing the thrill of a win. I want every group that goes through our program to feel that sense of accomplishment, growth, and pride, both on the court and in the lessons they carry beyond the game.
